Program Description:

In 100 Discoveries: The Nature of the Grand Prairie, four local Corps of Discovery groups trace the story and evolution of the Grand Prairie. In creating a temporary museum exhibit, featured through the end of this year in the Champaign County Forest Preserve's Museum of the Grand Prairie, these citizen-scientist-artists from around the state of Illinois offer their creative interpretation of the local landscape and how it has been shaped by forces both natural and man-made. Visitors to the exhibit can experience the landscape in winter, trace the flight of the dragonfly, gain an understanding of the birds and mammals native to the prairie, and learn the importance of preserving the rich natural resources of central Illinois' rivers and wildlife habitats.

Now housed in the Museum of the Grand Prairie (formerly the Early American Museum) in Champaign County's Lake of the Woods preserve, the exhibit will be traveling to the Rock Springs Nature Center in Decatur in January 2013, and to the Illinois Natural History Survey at the University of Illinois sometime in the future. Since the exhibit opened on March 1 in the Museum of the Grand Prairie, it has been the backdrop for several educational programs conducted by the Forest Preserve's cultural and environmental education staff.

Educational Objectives and Outcomes:

The exhibit has a variety of educational goals. Because of the diversity of the various interpretive panels and displays, each visitor is likely to come away with a different impression. The poems and drawings may appeal to the sensibilities of some visitors, while the photography and interactive displays may reach others more deeply. In general, the Corps of Discovery members had the following goals in mind:

- Through a variety of artistic media, expand the viewers' perspective of the intricacies and diversity of nature, particularly the landscape of the Grand Prairie region in which we live
- Introduce the public to the Corps of Discovery, a group founded by individuals at the IL Natural History Survey to encourage people to interpret and document the changing landscape through artistic expression
- Create a unique and meaningful exhibit that will serve as a foundation for cultural and educational programming developed by the Forest Preserve District's education staff

- After viewing 100 Discoveries of nature, encourage the exhibit visitor to go out and make his own discovery in the natural world and develop his own approach to interpret and chronicle its meaning and beauty
- Develop a museum exhibit to fill approximately 900 sq. ft., capable of being transported and reassembled in part or in its entirety in other museums, nature centers, or educational venues

Results for the District:
The 100 Discoveries exhibit was completed successfully and in accordance with its planned timeline. The exhibit opened to the public on March 1, 2012 and will run in the Museum of the Grand Prairie through the end of December. The exhibit features wonderful examples of nature photography, sketches and paintings, poetry, and interactive displays. Interpretive panels cover each of the four walls in the Redhed Room (the gallery in which the museum's temporary exhibits are featured), while the larger display cases and interactives are set up in the center and along the perimeter of the room. Folding panels filled with photography and art, including several that feature children's work, greet visitors as they enter the exhibit. One display case provides information about the Corps of Discovery's mission and encourages the public to make its own nature discoveries.

Reaction to the exhibit has been overwhelmingly positive. It was skillfully and artistically designed, constructed, and displayed within the museum. More than 7,100 individuals have visited the museum and the exhibit so far this year, with the total number for 2012 projected at about 8,000. Many individuals have commented specifically about 100 Discoveries - how much they enjoyed it and how much they learned from it. Several individuals remarked about the beauty of the local landscape and that we who reside here often don't realize how much natural splendor there is to see and experience right around us.

These three comments, typical of the remarks we have heard, were pulled from the visitor sign-in book:

- "Nice to learn more about my nature friends through their poetry and prose."
- "This (exhibit) borders on magic for the imagination."
- "I really like that the people who contributed to the exhibit and the places featured in it are all from around here."

Summary:
To summarize, the 100 Discoveries exhibit has been a tremendously successful endeavor for the Corps of Discovery members who participated, the Champaign County Forest Preserve, and the Museum of the Grand Prairie. The educational objectives have been met, as evidenced by the comments provided by the visitors to the exhibit. Perhaps our most important goal in particular has been met, in that the exhibit seems to be encouraging visitors to further explore the District preserves and the other natural areas right here in Champaign County.

He and his family, however, continued residence until about 1913 when they moved to the Jayhawker state. They did not like living there, however, for the land was commencing to "blow" as the result of plowing up of the prairie grass and the dust storms and drought were nearly unbearable, and after a few years they returned to Rankin. Colonel Marshall stated that since coming back he had lived in Rankin most of the time except the recent years which he spent back in Kansas and Nebraska working part of the time as a real estate agent.

'100 Discoveries' exhibit sheds light on visions of Central Illinois' natural wonders

By STEPHANIE HENRY
Mahomet Citizen correspondent

A new exhibit at the Museum of the Grand Prairie features the artistic interpretations of nature through the eyes of many "explorers" of the Grand Prairie region, including photographs, sketches, and paintings.

The traveling exhibit, "100 Discoveries: The Nature of the Grand Prairie," will be on display at the museum now through December 31.

The new exhibit was introduced at a kick-off ceremony this past Saturday at the museum, during which visitors were treated to a multimedia presentation featuring some of the pieces in the exhibit.

Lisa Sprinkle, marketing coordinator for the Museum, said the exhibit was created by members of the Corps of Discovery program. The Corps of Discovery, part of the Illinois Natural History Survey, is made up of a series of workshops designed to teach participants to communicate nature through photography, writing and illustration. Sprinkle said those who take the course are not necessarily professional artists or photographers, but they are taught in the classes how to sketch or photograph things they see in nature.

Michael Jeffords, a professor from the Corps of Discovery classes also gave a brief presentation on the exhibit at Saturday's grand opening ceremony.

Some elements in the exhibit include interpretations of animal or plant life found in the Grand Prairie depicted in watercolor paintings, sketches, photographs, writings, and even 3D clay works, which Sprinkle described as "identical to what would be found in nature."

Sprinkle said there also are some interactive elements in the exhibit. She added that both adults and kids would enjoy the exhibit, and that it could take 30 minutes to an hour to walk through the entire exhibit.

"The idea for the exhibit was something we thought fit well into the theme of the Grand Prairie," Sprinkle said. "It's just a perfect fit for the museum."

Because it is a traveling exhibit, Sprinkle said another location has been set up for exhibit after December 2012.

Sprinkle said the hope behind the exhibit is that people will be inspired to go out into nature and document what they see, even if they are not skilled artists or photographers.

"One hope is that people who come to the exhibit will see things about the Grand Prairie, and then will want to go out and make their own discoveries in nature," Sprinkle said.

Admission is free to the museum and exhibit. The Museum of The Grand Prairie, which is located in the Lake of the Woods Forest Preserve, is now open for the season from 1:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. every day.

For more information call the museum at 217-586-2612.
